While the springs no longer flow to the surface, the area still holds archaeological treasures dating back thousands of years. It also provides a habitat for a variety of plants and animals. As the site's owner and steward, the Las Vegas Valley Water District is working with the Springs Preserve Foundation to protect the area and create a community gathering place—a gateway through time where people can learn about the valley's rich history and explore methods to ensure sustainability for our future.

The Hoover Dam towers 725 feet above the Colorado River, and is one of America's grandest achievements. Tours include exploring the top of the Dam, viewing the winged statues, historical tributes and spillways. The visitor center offers an outstanding view of the Dam and features a film on the history of the Dam and the Boulder City area, along with an interesting lecture by one of the Hoover Dam guides.

Construction of Hoover Dam began in 1930 and, despite the harsh conditions of the land and the country of the time, was completed in less than five years. It was the largest dam at the time. The Dam is named after America's 31st president, Herbert Hoover, based on orders from the Secretary of the Interior. Hoover played a large role in bringing the nearby states into agreement about water allocations, settling a 25-year controversy. The Dam has also been called Boulder Canyon Dam or Boulder Dam because, allegedly, after Hoover left office the new Secretary of the Interior did not like Hoover. Congress reinstated Hoover Dam as the official name in 1947.

After completing the Hoover Dam Tour, guests will travel to the Ethel M Chocolate factory. Learn how the Mars family created and manufactures the handmade, gourmet candy and chocolate. While taking this self-guided tour, guests will watch how these chocolates are made through the viewing windows. As the tour concludes, enjoy a free sample of the delectable delights!
